

Digital Engagement Volunteer: Creator

Where you'll be based

Home-based, or with our team in Leeds

About the role

More and more people are looking for help online following a brain tumour diagnosis. We have a growing team of digital volunteers who are furthering brainstrust's mission in the virtual world.

We currently need volunteer content creators and conversation starters to work with our incredible online community of people with a brain tumour and their caregivers.

You will work on content for our website, social channels and Facebook group, bringing your own experiences and reflections on life with a brain tumour to life to inspire others to seek help and regain control following an isolating and confusing brain tumour diagnosis.

brainstrust's Digital Engagement Volunteers create vital impact through raising awareness of our mission and inspiring others to engage, help and act.

Skills and attributions

- Understanding of life with a brain tumour – you might be a patient, caregiver, family member or friend. Either way, you'll understand some of the challenges facing people with a brain tumour and their loved ones.
- Communication skills – talking, writing, chatting to new people – do you love any of these things? We're always looking for new blogs for our website, but if writing isn't your thing and you're happier talking, then you can film engaging video content for our social channels!
- Digital awareness – you'll have social media, understand how it works, and what sort of content is shared there. You'll read blogs and website content related to brain tumours.
- Creativity – your ideas will help shape the work you do! You'll be starting conversations and helping raise awareness about brainstrust in new and exciting ways, so being creative is a must for this role.

Time commitment

This can be discussed, but we envisage that you'd spend a minimum of a couple of hours each week doing this role. When you work can be determined by your schedule, so do chat to us about what would work for you.
